Political.

FRANKFORT, JAN. 27, 1887.

To the Frankfort Roundabout:

In a short time the Republican party of Kentucky will assemble to nominate candidates for the various State offices. Of all the State offices in the gift of the people, that of Governor demands our gravest attention, for if the Governor be a pure and honest man, and not the tool of monopolists, or a despiser of honest labor, or a sycophant of a syndicate, then the law-makers will take their character from the reflex of his. Such a man Kentucky needs at the helm of State. If the Republicans of Kentucky fail to make a proper selection it will be their own fault.

Having a common interest in the prosperity and future welfare of dear old Kentucky, I have no hesitancy in expressing my preference. Without detracting from the merits of others, I think Col. Wm. O. Bradley is pre-eminently the best qualified candidate before the party for Governor. He has a public record for efficiency and ability as a jurist. As an orator and a statesman, he is the peer of any in Kentucky. Intimately acquainted with the wants of the people, and the progressive development of his native State, he is ever ready as he is able to promote the best interests of all its citizens. If nominated, he will make the political atmosphere so hot for the corrupt mismanagers of State affairs that the offenders cannot breathe it and live. I sincerely believe that his nomination is tantamount to a victory.
